Natural Pathways

James Hillman and Robert Bly often refer to male intimacy as those rare instances where father and son walk shoulder to shoulder and share personal moments by watching a sunset, water lap the shore, or walking in a woods. Sometimes, they speak to each other with words; often, nothing needs to be said.

The Fathers & Sons weekend workshop is an exploration into the relationship between Fathers & Sons. The focus is to delve deeply into the relational aspects by revealing our personal stories to each other. Dynamic exercises will be provided to support an inward journey and then the opportunity to share these private stories with each other.

The intention of the weekend is to take advantage of the wooded area of the Chagrin Valley. Living in tents, Father & Son will have the privacy of family, the comfort of the surrounding forest, and the support of the community of other fathers and sons. Woven into the fabric of the weekend are experiences that support personal and interpersonal explorations of whom are you as a father, as a son, and as two men.
